Who Owns What: An Update

A year and a half ago (April 2007), by popular demand, we ran on this page what we billed as a handy, dandy, one-page clip-and-save guide to the major watch groups and their brands. Well, it's already obsolete, so, by popular demand, we're updating the list. One difference from last year's guide is that the Bulova Corp. brands are now part of the Citizen Group, which acquired Bulova this year. We've also added Italy's Binda Group, a fast-growing watch company which anticipates revenues of $665 million this year.

Other newcomer brands are sprinkled around the page. There's Tiffany, which last year entered into a long-term deal with a major group to produce and distribute its watches. Ditto for Ralph Lauren. Then there are the formerly independent brands Hublot, Martin Braun, and Roger Dubuis, whose owners sold the companies to groups. I'll let you discover who bought whom.

Brands without asterisks are owned by the group. An asterisk indicates that the group/company does not own the brand but produces those watches under a license agreement or some other contract with the brand owner. ○
